

As you can see, I did not find the time to finish the entire thing, let alone care about design. That being said, I chose to put the moving cross-hair on the average temperature line, because I figured that would be the most interesting to see the exact value of.

Everything else is literally default values, since I had no time. The max temp line could have been made orange (since it corresponds to a 'hotter' temperature), but since I used defaults I ended up not changing the colours at all.